

Areva extricates itself from Imouraren

Having permanently given up its plans to mine uranium in Niger's Imouraren, Areva is now trying to sell its permit.

The entire article (188 words) may be accessed by subscribers or e-wallet users

Already have an account?

Email address

Password

Forgot your password?

Keep me logged in

Pay-Per-Article

This article: 6 EUR

E-wallet
starting from 30 EUR

Subscribe

Each of these subscriptions give you access to this article

- AfricaIntelligence.com
- West Africa Newsletter

STAY UP-TO-DATE

- NIGER
- Areva
- Cominak
- Imouraren SA
- Mamadou Tandja
- Mohamed Akotey
- Nicolas Sarkozy
- Olivier Wantz
- Omar Hamidou "Ladan" Tchiana
- Somair

What is it?

ON THE SAME SUBJECT

NIGER 09/12/2015

Economy harms Issoufou's electoral hopes

Niger's Mahamadou Issoufou is eyeing another term of office in 2016 but he'll have to gloss over his calamitous record on the economy. [...]

NIGER 18/02/2015

Imouraren mining project dies slow death

The much-hyped Imouraren uranium mining project signed by Areva and the government of Niger in 2009 may never see the light of day. [...]

NIGER 25/06/2014

Issoufou sticks to guns on Imouraren

The deal signed by the government of Niger and Areva in Niamey on May 26 calls for the establishment of a joint strategic committee to decide when the Imouraren uranium mine goes into production. [...]

NIGER 31/12/2013

Niamey v Areva

The push by Niamey to renegotiate the agreements that tie Niger to French nuclear giant Areva is rekindling tensions around President Mahamadou Issoufou. [...]

Issoufou hangs on by thread

Sand-storms are swirling around Niamey. Undermined by the insecurity that seems to have encircled Niger for the foreseeable future, President Mahamadou Issoufou has had to increase military spending to the detriment of other pressing needs. With power outages and strikes [...]