It’s necessary to reorganize the economy internally in line...

Enhancing Corporate Competitiveness in International Economic Integration

In the process of international economic integration, a developed country is a country with a highly competitive business community. According to economists, the competitiveness of a business is seen in at least two aspects, its productivity and the living quality of its workers. Thus, a highly competitive company has better productivity and higher living quality among its employees. In reality, the Vietnamese business community has not formulated strong competitive power. According to a survey carried out by the authors of the Scientific Thesis 2012 of the Vietnam Chamber of Commerce and Industry (VCCI), entitled “Impacts of international economic integration five years...

Positioning Core Competency to Ensure Competitiveness in International Economic Integration

1. Company and Core CompetencyA total of 764,374 enterprises were established under the Law on Enterprises as of January 1, 2014, of which some 500,000 are in operation in the economy. In the past five years, especially in the last two years, Vietnamese enterprises have captured a lot of business opportunities thanks to international integration. However, the business community has also faced risks arising from macroeconomic instability reflected in inflation and interest rates. Although the Government has introduced many drastic solutions to support businesses, their operations have not recovered much. New business start-ups declined for the first time since the...
